prisons are by definition closed and the sense of confinement can affect staff as much as inmates not only is the work of educators in prisons at risk of being at best ignored at worst disparaged by the public at large but also its closed institutional nature has often resulted in the separation from the mainstream of adult education in reality many of the initiatives highlighted in recent years the development of basic skills the urgency of vocational education and its linkage to an element of social education special programmes for the educationally disadvantaged for example have been the bread and butter of prison educators for many years this sector has a wealth of expertise to offer a definitive statement to catch a variety of interested eyes rather than allow strict comparisons to be made most of the chapters are concerned with a hardening of public attitudes towards the treatment of prisoners the rehabilitative services in prisons would seem to have taken more than their fair share of the international pulling back from the expenditure of public money and it is difficult to imagine private purses being opened for this purpose there is not a great deal of publicity or glamour to be found within prisons what emerges from this book is a sense of the writers enthusiasm whether it comes from their sense of social duty a personal sense of outrage a professional sense that students should be looked after or a liberal instinct for human rights in the first part the authors introduce theories of public policy the policy process and decision making they then discuss eurogovernance in the light of issues such as immigration health policy eastward expansion of the european union eu structural funding and defence policy their findings are that there is no correct way to analyze europe s public policy and governance the type of analysis changes according to its context also discussed is the continuing hegemony exercised by the usa in for example security and defence issues as well as economic management the book emphasizes the dangers emanating from regions of instability dangers if not properly addressed could pose a threat to the grand designs of the architects of the eu s political and cultural destiny for courses in public policy and policy analysis this readable and conceptual approach to public policy carefully balances theory and practice unlike most other texts which either lack theory or lack practicality the authors combine positivist and postpositivist perspectives on policy analysis supported by interesting and useful teaching cases fully classroom tested the text material explores the political basis of policy making and analysis with a careful eye toward students practical needs models and tools are provided along with the analytical knowledge necessary for policy analysis carefully structured chapters offer instructors maximum ease and flexibility in the classroom the european union is committed to achieving the goal of creating a network of instruments that will comprehensively cover almost all the aspects of private international law this will significantly affect the freedom of national legislators to undertake their law making tasks however these two proceedings should not be contrary as this book demonstrates european harmonization is being developed from the feedback of the national experiences the book is the outcome of theoretical and practical research carried out by a group of legal experts from different specialties and jurisdictions it includes several contributions in the fields of the recently adopted instruments of private international law e g mediation in civil and commercial matters maintenance obligations or conflict of law rules on divorce some national experiences when applying these instruments in particular in the new eu member states and also the ongoing works in order to review some current instruments brussels i or to approve new ones e g successions or matrimonial property regimes in conclusion the book offers an updated and critical contribution to the huge common task of elaboration of a european private international law adopted by the eu institutions
